Working title of the project:

Minor Delinquency and Fighting in 14 ESPAD Countries in 2007

Abstract: (Please describe objectives, methods and specify the research question(s), maximum 250 words.)

Objective: To study and account for the differences between ESPAD countries in teenage minor delinquency and fighting.

Methods: The 10 items of the questionnaire section B4 which are designed to measure minor delinquency and fighting among teenagers will be the dependent variables. Predictor variables at the individual level will include items measuring parental attitude towards drugs, the respondent's substance use, parental monitoring, caring and warmth from friends and parents, cigarette smoking, parental rule setting and the Bjarsson anomie questions. An initial pilot study on 4 countries indicates that there will be associations between all these predictor variables and minor delinquency and fighting. Also that there will be significant between country differences but that these will not all be explained by the individual level predictor variables. Therefore various country level variables (yet to be finalised) such as the status of women within the country and the pattern of alcohol use will be included as predictors.

Research questions: Specifically to assess the strength of the associations between minor delinquency and fighting, the predictor variables above and countries, with a view to suggesting the determinants of antisocial behaviour by teenagers.
